Panel Discussion: Privacy vs. Public Good – How Open Should Government Be?

Tuesday, March 19, 2019 | 6:00 p.m. – 7:30 p.m.

Should police officers accused of misconduct have their personnel files opened to the public? Should the president be able to shield disclosure of records by claiming “executive privilege”? What about records of investigations against major government officials? A distinguished panel addresses these questions and more in a discussion of state and federal open government laws.

Class covers:

- The importance of government transparency, and the goals it is meant to accomplish
- Personnel files of police and other officials accused of misconduct – secret or not?
- When a president may claim “executive privilege” to keep records secret
- Can records of criminal investigations be disclosed? What if they involve a major government official?
- Practical tips on litigating cases under the California Public Records Act and the Freedom of Information Act
